

ABSTRACT

A cache residency test instruction is described which, when executed by a processor unit, allows the processor unit to determine if a set of data resides in a cache memory that is communicatively coupled to the processor unit and communicate a result of the determination to software being executed on the processor unit.